Why now?	To develop the key skills and knowledge of the Depth unit. This unit focuses on the changes in leisure over the last 122 years. this is an important area because it helps historians understand other areas of development such as social class, media and the economy. this area has often been neglected in the past, so it gives students a fresh focus on an area that is not usually studied lower down the school.	To develop the key skills and knowledge of the Depth unit. This study focuses on the development of the newspaper during World War One through to the end of World War two. This is important as it gives an understanding of how the written media and radio affected our lives in the early part of the twentieth century during a time of great conflict and between the wars. It also provides students with a canny insight into today's relationship between politicians and the media.	To develop the key skills and knowledge of the Depth unit. With a link back to Year 9 history an the importance of the post war era this unit focuses on the advent of liberalism but more so the extent to which society ' attitudes changed due to the impact of media, especially cinema and television. It also explores themes of social class, ethnicity, and gender and how far these areas have been moulded by the media in this country. The next unit is focussed on the 1980s a significant watershed in change for Britain politically and economically, the focus here is on the concept of Thatcherism and this time how the government used the media to aid its agenda	To develop the key skills and knowledge of the Depth unit. Here we have a unit that is exploring a recent period of history that helps students understand conflict going on today. This highly focussed short depth study revolves around the extremely controversial war with Iraq in 2002 and how Britain got involved . Student are able to develop a highly critical approach to the evidence and thus make judgements on this is key event in later twentieth century history. In addition, this links to work den on the Middle east in Year 9.	To revise key skills and knowledge over the last two years
