PiXL Endurance is a strategy (with supporting resource) designed to help students develop exam related stamina and resilience in the period before they take their exams. We know that students are being well prepared at school for the content they will face in their exams and all of us are working hard to help them identify their weaknesses and to address them, assess them regularly and equip them as best we are able. However, sometimes students fail to help themselves. We know of the students who after eating a doughnut, some fizzy sweets and a can of energy drink, think they are prepared to sit their exams.

We know that some of them are not sleeping enough, not developing good working habits, finding it difficult to know what to do first. We also know that issues around mental health are on the rise – students who find the pressure and intensity of an exam period overwhelming and the expectation on them crippling.
